

Blood at the Roots: African Native American Women

Through a one-woman show, Reanae takes the audience on a fascinating journey of the liberation struggles of African Native American women across the diverse nations they come from. Using their stories and activism, she allows us to delve into their lives and the valuable contributions they bring to social transformation and planetary change. She also shares her own story of her ancestry of Cherokee and Choctaw while making a space for the sacred stories of African Native American women to transform our consciousness.

African Native American Women: Resistance and Activism through the Arts

Taking the audience on a journey, Reanae uses visual images, video, and stories to convey the powerful activism of African Native American women through their art. Using her research and family stories, she welcomes the audience to think about transgressive identities, activism, and the arts.
